

The German Cruiser Karlsruhe That Has Been a Terror to the Shipping of the Allies in the South Atlantic. It Has Been Reported That She Was Destroyed on a Reef in the Caribbean Sea and Then Blown up by Her Commander. (Photograph from a Kodak Snapshot.)

The French Battleship Bouvet Which Was Sunk by the Turks When Making an Assault on the Forts of the Dardanelles. The Slooping of the Bouvet Are Typical of French Cruisers of This Class and Make Them Easily Distinguishable from Battleships of Other Nationalities.

(Photograph by Modern News Service.)